COMMUNICATIONS.

Address to the Governor of the State of New York. By Samuel J. Tilden. The address is directed to the Governor of the State of New York, expressing the sentiments of the addresser regarding the state of the country and the duties of the governor. The address is written in a clear and concise manner, and is divided into several paragraphs, each having a distinct topic. The addresser expresses concern about the condition of the state, and recommends several measures to improve it. The address is signed by the name of the person who wrote it, and is dated a certain day, month, and year. The address is printed in black ink on white paper, and is divided into paragraphs by indentation. The addresser is a well-known politician, and is respected for his ability to express himself clearly and effectively. The address is well-written, and is easy to read and understand. The address is a valuable resource for anyone interested in learning about the state of the country and the duties of the governor.